

Luo Yang, Kaya, from the series CHINA FEVER, 2019

LUO YANG

Born 1984, Liaoning, China lives and works in Beijing & Shanghai

B.A. from Lu Xun Academy of Fine Arts, Shenyang, 2009.

In 2012, Ai Weiwei pronounced her as one of the "rising stars of Chinese photography" (New Statesmen). Today, Luo Yang is well-acclaimed in her own regard, having had numerous exhibitions in Asia and abroad. Her monograph GIRLS was published on occasion of the 10-year anniversary of her series. In her work, highly staged portraits and carefully constructed poses alternate with a raw, blurred snapshot-aesthetic.

In 2019 she received the Jimei x Arles Women Photographer's Award.

Bold yet intimate, these are Luo Yang's portraits. With her film camera, she explores and records the changes happening among contemporary Chinese young people, rarely taken note of in the West. Her subjects are raw, revealing their strengths and fragilities all at once. If at a first glance they may seem badass and confident, they are also insecure and torn at the same time. With her first series GIRLS, the artist frames Chinese women, in order to better understand their life as well as her own. Empathy plays a key role in this connection that arises between Luo Yang and her models, letting emerge shared emotions, concerns, and experiences. In her latest one, Youth, Luo Yang defies stereotypes and questions gender norms, shedding light on the diversity of China's young generation in a sensitive way. As such, her images revolve around the themes of youth, nudity and femininity, while celebrating personal growth.
